Instructions

- [ ] Soak the chickpeas. Soak the chickpeas overnight in a large bowl of room-temperature water. Alternatively, quick-soak in hot water for 2–3 hours.

- [ ] Cook the chickpeas. Drain and rinse the chickpeas. Add them to a pressure cooker and fill with water until it is an inch above the chickpeas. Add salt and pressure cook for 3 whistles. Remove from heat and open the cooker only after the steam has escaped on its own.

- [ ] Reserve some chickpeas. Drain and reserve some of the cooking liquid as well as some boiled chickpeas aside.

- [ ] Blend until smooth. In a large processor, combine the boiled chickpeas, tahini and garlic until almost smooth. Add a little cooking liquid if the paste is very thick. Season with salt and lemon juice. Taste and adjust.

- [ ] Garnish and serve. Remove the hummus into a serving bowl, make a little depression in the center and add the reserved chickpeas. Sprinkle some paprika and drizzle olive oil.

Make-ahead tip

Soak and cook the chickpeas, then freeze them in a small container with some cooking liquid. When ready to make, defrost and simply follow step 4.

Hummus variations

Add roasted capsicum for roasted capsicum hummus, beetroot chutney or roasted beetroot purée for beetroot hummus, or turmeric for golden turmeric hummus.

How to store

Store extra hummus in an airtight box in the fridge for 2–3 days or freeze for up to 2 months.
